OBTAINING SWEET-BIRCH OIL

Industry Has Become Quite a Matter of Importance in Some Sections of the South.

Sweet-birch oil has been made in this country for many years and is obtained from the wood and bark of the black birch. The oil is a product of steam distillation plants, where, in addition to the twigs, bark and young sprouts of the birch, the entire tree is sometimes used. More picturesque are the methods employed by the southern mountaineer. A rough camp and crude distillery are erected near a supply of birch. According to persons who have seen both kinds, the "still" is not unlike the type sometimes employed in the same locality for making "blockade" whiskey. The camp is anything which will protect the workmen from the weather. The bark is peeled from the tree and the rough outer portion is scraped off. It is then broken to cook it. A fire is started and the resulting steam is led through a pipe and finally condensed. The heavy oil gathers in a receptacle, while the water runs off. Three or four men compose the usual crew. One of these spends all of his time at the still, while the others gather and prepare the bark. About twenty-two bushels of bark are used for every run and it is said that this amount yields approximately four pounds of oil. Three or four runs a week can be made. The method has been in use for many years, and most of the accessible birch in the valleys has been cut. Each year the oil makers have to go farther back in the mountains. Very often the stills are located in isolated places which can be reached only on foot, and all of the material for the plants and camp are carried in on the backs of the mountaineers.

ACCORDING TO RANCH CODE

Cowboy Did the Only Thing He Felt There Was to Do Under the Circumstances.

A story certainly untrue, but one beautifully plausible, was told by the Abilene (Kan.) Reflector. It concerns a man who—by definition, as the mathematicians say—had spent all his life on a remote cattle ranch and was utterly inexperienced in any tenderer or gentler relations than those which exist between men like himself and between them and their bovine charges. This untutored yet thoroughly well-intentioned person, according to the tale as told, at last went to a border town and there, as might have been expected, he fell promptly and violently in love with the first woman with whom he became acquainted, who happened to be the pretty waitress who served him at the table. His wooing was equally vigorous and successful. In a few days the twain were married and together they started back for the ranch on horseback.

A week later the cowboy returned to the town alone and of deeply sorrowful mien. To the natural and immediate inquiries that were made as to the whereabouts of his bride he replied, with tears starting to his eyes and running down his lean, bronzed cheeks: "She broke her leg two days out and I had to shoot her. And I tell you, boys," he added, "I hated to do it—she was such a good woman!"

Plethora of Family.
In the absence of their mother, little John's two older sisters were finding it rather difficult to manage their mischievous four-year-old brother. One day when he had especially tried their patience they reported the matter to their father just as they were sitting down to dinner. John's father promptly scolded him, and when he had finished, one sister, thinking that the culprit had not been sufficiently impressed, gave her ideas on the subject, and when she had concluded the other sister added her opinion. All this time John had made no remarks, but had calmly continued to drink his milk, only gazing attentively across the top of his mug at each speaker in turn. When at last they were silent he set down his mug and leaned back wearily in his chair. "Oh, gee," he observed dejectedly, "I wish I didn't have so much family."

Mrs. Maud Linneborn of Muskogee has returned home after a week's visit with friends here.
